AMUSEMENTS,

"The American Countess" at Albaugh's.

To a fairly well-filled house Mile. Rhes appeared last night in "The American Countess." Since the play was first presented here some changes have been made in it. There has been a good deal of judiclous pruning; but the play is not yet a strong and symmetrical one in all its parts. Some of the characters are very weak, and at least two or three of them would appear to be appendicans. There are still strong suggestions of borrowed work in the play. There is an appeared imitation of a scone from "The Romance of a Poor Young Man." There are also weakly disguised imitations of the Mrs. General Cilifory and the Libby Dear of the "Almighty Dollar." We also think that we can discover in the outline of the leading character that the author has been a pretty thorough student of Eugene Suca Audreane de Carbeille in the "Wandering Jew," but we are not surprised that Mile. Rhea likes the play. It gives her a fell, free acope for the exhibition of her remarkable powers in the portrayal of passion and emotion. Last night she was in excellent mood. She was grand.

An objection that we would are to the

An objection that we would urge to the

An objection that we would argo to the play is the too frequent tragic commands of the heroine for some one to "Go!" One cannot but expect that at each repetition of the scene the words of Lady Macbeth will be called into requisition and something said about not standing on the order of going but go at once. To-night "The School for Scandal" will be given. As Mile. Rhea has a good company with her that admirable comedy as presented will afford a rare treat to those who go to Albaugh's to-night. Albaugh's to-night.

Rhea as "Camille."

Her conception of the character of Cimille is slightly different from the one prevailing on the American stage, and is an improvement on the common one. She is really a phenomenal actress, and, barring her foreign accent, was beyond criticism. This peculiarity of her speech is not at all unpleasant, but quite the reverse, slithough occasionally one not faultiar with the words of her part loses them. It is just here that her most wonderful success is to be seen. Her every gesture speaks so plainly, her expression tells so much, that even if she spoke in French her meaning would be perfectly understool.

Dime Museum.

Mesers. Barton and Logan presented at Rhen as "Camille."

Mesers Barton and Logan presented at their popular Dime Museum yesterday the grand old spectacle and sensational play of "The Sea of Ica." It was put upon the stage with magnifecent scenery and mechanical effects, and as played by Milton Abard's celebrated dramatic company, with Lettic Church as Louise, the heroine, it proved one of the dramatic events of the season. In every tone and movement she showed herevery tone and movement she showed here every tone and movement she showed her-self a true actress, and is cotilled to take her place in the leading ranks of stars.

Little Doing On the Street-Prices Drag - Absence of Startling Rumors.

The number of shares of stock dealt in yesterday in Wall street was about 130,000, and reflects a very duil day. It is not astonishing that inactivity prevails in stocks, especially when a large bear following is declaring that an European war would cause a serious break in all kinds of securities, while the bulls are equally positive that the war would boom everything American, and as the same time the situation in Europe grows more and more peaceful. Amid such conflicts of news and opinious, the average speculator thrusts tils hands in his pockets and waits.

THE MARVELOUS AUTOMATIO.

Gurtesity of curtostics! One of the Wonders of the world!

This worderful cariosity, which has created such an interest in all the large Cities of Europe, was invented by Tallesia Gilhett of France. After being exhibited there for some time it was sent to London and placed on exhibition, where it was visited by Queen Victoria and all her Court, including nearly every member of Farliament and many thousants of the populace. While a former agent of F. T. Euroum was en a visit to Europe in search of novelies, no heard of this great work of Art. He at once visited the inventor and by offering a large sum of money obtained his consent to bring this great worked to bring this great work of Art. See the search of the work of the consent to bring this great worked in the leading Cities of the United States to over 7,000.000 people. Administration 10 c s.
